General Tax Information

Whether reinvested in additional shares or taken in cash, mutual fund shareholders are responsible for taxes on all ordinary income distributions. For federal income tax purposes, the fund's distributions of net investment income are taxable to shareholders as ordinary income. Additionally, shareholders will not be able to use any capital losses to offset those gains. This data is provided for informational purposes only. Every year in January, shareholders are sent a Form 1099-DIV, which provides the federal tax status of dividends and distributions received during the calendar year. We recommend that shareholders consult their tax advisors for assistance with how this information will impact their specific tax situation.

This general tax information does not constitute, and should not be considered a substitute for, tax or legal advice. The rules governing the proper tax characterization of distributions by mutual funds can be complex. Each fund shareholder should consult his or her own tax advisor regarding the proper tax characterization and reporting of the fund's distributions.

The NAV drops in direct relationship to the dividend paid, plus or minus market movement. For example, if a fund has a $10.00 NAV and pays a $0.25 dividend, the stated NAV will be $9.75 if there is no market movement. The day's market movement will be added or subtracted to the $9.75 NAV. In this case, the shareholder will either receive more shares of the fund if dividend reinvestment is selected or take the distribution in cash.
